Real Estate Advice: When Spouses Divorce

Q. Sue, I am going through a divorce. Do you have any advice regarding our home?

A. The following advice is supplied to me by a Certified Divorce Financial Analyst, as common errors people make :

1. Not listing the real estate in the Summons and Petition.

Result: This might prevent you from getting a divorce, might prevent you from selling the property until you go back to court to amend and correct the decree, might result in your spouse getting more of a share of that property, and other problems.

2. Not using the correct "legal description" for the property or using the street address instead of the legal description.

Result: These are not enforceable.

3. Having verbal or written "side" agreements about the property that are not part of the divorce decree.

Result: These are not enforceable, and, if your ex-spouse changes his or her mind, you are out of luck.

4. Assuming you are not responsible for the mortgage because your ex-spouse was awarded the house.

Result: The court cannot order the lender to take your name off the mortgage. Being on the mortgage is between you and the lender. Having your name on the mortgage for a house awarded to your ex-spouse may prevent you from qualifying for another mortgage. If your spouse fails to make payments on the mortgage, the lender may try to collect from you.

5. Deeding the property between spouses before the divorce is final.

Result: Some people think that, if their spouse is not listed on the deed for the property, the property does not need to be part of the divorce proceedings. There are two mistakes here. First, all real estate is part of the divorce proceedings, even if the deed is in only one name. Second, a deed between spouses during the marriage is not effective. Under the law, a spouse has a "marital interest" in all real estate owned by the other spouse. You cannot deed away that marital interest while still married to each other.
